

NITOBE IS IMPRESSED WITH UNIVERSITY'S SIZE

EARNING ON WONDERFUL SCALE

Japanese Professor Gives Impressions of Illinois in Interview Last Night—Gives Final Lecture.

The great size of the University of Illinois and the number of buildings impressed me perhaps more than anything else during my visit to your institution," said Dr. Inazo Nitobe in interview yesterday. "The magnitude of your different colleges here on the scale on which education is conducted is wonderful." Dr. Nitobe this morning for Richmond, Indiana. From there he will go to Cleveland, Ohio, to Oberlin College, and then to the University of Minnesota, where he is to deliver a course of lectures.

Agricultural Education Practical
"Agricultural education in Japan," continued Dr. Nitobe, "differs considerably from that in this country. In Japan there is more theory, and less the practical work that an agricultural student receives in the United States. A great deal of attention in this country is paid to science, chemistry, botany, and bacteriology, but experiment stations and model farms are not conducted. The fact that agriculture in Japan is intensive rather than extensive may have something to do with this."

Dr. Nitobe compared the students of the eastern and western states of this country. "The students at Illinois," he remarked, "impress me most as having three characteristic qualities, energy, buoyancy, and hopefulness. The student of the eastern universities is quieter, he looks upon life more seriously than does the student of the western university."

Japanese Students Serious
"The same comparison may be made in regard to our Japanese students. They take their work very seriously and enter into athletics only to a slight extent. If the Japanese student fails in one of his courses he becomes very much discouraged, whereas I have not particularly noticed this tendency among American students."

"Another thing which particularly impressed me," continued the speaker, "is the practical work done by the western universities. The eastern colleges emphasize more the theoretical and cultured side of education, whereas in the west the practical side is emphasized. The western student is aggressive, hopeful, and characterized by a cheerful outlook upon life."

Final Lecture Last Night
The subject of Dr. Nitobe's final lecture last night was "The Relations between Japan and America." He reviewed the history of Japanese and American diplomatic relations, and discussed several of the recent problems which have presented themselves before the two nations.

Until early in the nineteenth century, it was the policy of Japan to treat all foreigners, even persons shipwrecked on the shores, with the greatest severity. The whaling industry first drew the attention of the United States to Japan. In 1817 Commodore Porter advised President Monroe to open negotiations with Japan for a commercial treaty with the latter. In 1837 an American named King equipped a vessel he called the "Morrison," and went to Japan with a number of Japanese who had been shipwrecked on the American shore. Subsequently, similar attempts were

ILLINI TOSSERS BEAT INDIANA; SCORE, 4-3

WATTS TWIRLS TEAM TO VICTORY IN FOURTH STRAIGHT CONFERENCE WIN.

RAGGED DEFENSIVE WORK CONTINUES

Both Teams Make Many Errors—Indiana Is Worst Offender—Phelps Gets Another Homer.

Illinois annexed her fourth Conference victory of the present season yesterday when Indiana was put away by a score of 4 to 3. The contest was a battle of southpaws, with Watts performing for the Illini, and Shultz acting as master of ceremonies for the Hoosiers.

The fielding of both teams was ragged, each team being guilty of some offenses that were almost inexcusable. Coach Huff's men were there with the batting eye at the right time and connected with Mr. Schultz's offerings in bunches, so that four of the six bingles were productive of runs.

Weber Back on Job

Weber was back on the job at short, so "Shorty" Thomas went back to his old station in center, while Prindiville worked at first, and Kay was on duty at second. "Butts" Phelps delivered another home run in the sixth session which started the Illinois rally and very much disturbed Brother Schultz's peace of mind. A moment later Rowe poled out a double, the only other extra base hit of the game, and scored two runners, counting the tally that put Illinois in the lead, never to be headed.

Hoosier Tossers Die Hard

The Hoosiers were exponents of the "never say die" spirit throughout the game. Although their two run lead, which they assumed in the first of the sixth, was overcome in a hurry, they kept doggedly plugging away until the last man died in the ninth. Their efforts in the last stand especially were telling. With one gone, two pinch hitters made good with singles, but Watts made Andy Gill pop to Weber and the scare was over.

Catcher Schultz of the Brothers Schultz battery had his troubles. His pegging wing was way off form, and the Illinois runners were able to take a lot of liberty on the paths. Andy Gill, of football fame, essayed to play about the entire fielding game by himself after Ramsey at third muffed an easy one. Andy found the task was a good-sized one.

No Scoring Until Fifth

The game was air tight during the first two innings, Trout for Indiana breaking the spell with a single in the third. He went to second when Watts heaved a wild one at Prindiville in an effort to catch the runner, but expired a second later when the Illini twirler and Weber caught him napping at second. Gill also singled, and was out at first on a throw from Fletcher.

With two gone in the Illini half of the third Thomas got to first after dumping one down the base line which Fleming could not handle in time. "Shorty" stole second and third, but was left at the far corner when Phelps fanned.

Illinois Scores First Run

Illinois broke the line of goose eggs in the fifth. With one gone, Prindiville hit safely, and went to second as Pitcher Schultz fired one over Fleming's head at first. Watts was given a pass, and "Shorty" scored Fletcher with a nice bingle to right. Watts was run down trying to make third, and Thomas was caught stealing the sack for the last out. The big doings for both sides came in the sixth. Gill, first up for Indiana, was an easy out, Breton to Prindiville. Ramsey walked, and A. Schultz hit for a single, sending Ramsey to third, Breton dropping Rowe's perfect peg. On Fleming's grounder to Weber, Ramsey scored, Fletcher dropping the throw at the plate. Jones rolled to Weber, and Schultz was run down between third and home. Martindale singled, scoring Fleming and Jones, and Trout lined to Prindiville for the final out.

Illini Again Take Lead

The Illini came right back in their half, Phelps putting one past the track for a home run, starting the rally. Schultz passed Weber before he could recover from the shock, and followed it up with another wild throw to first, allowing Weber to trot on to second. Breton lofted a high one to Martindale, and was safe at second when the left fielder muffed it. Rowe stepped into the breach and doubled, sending both runners past the counting station. Prindiville lined to Gill, who doubled up Rowe at third, after running clear over to the sack himself so as to be dead sure of the play.

Pinch Hitters Threaten

This inning was the last of the scoring, although the Hoosiers threatened in the ninth after the pinch hitters, Winters and Magee, had singled. Fletcher, first up for the Illini in the seventh, banged a safe one to right, but was doubled at first when Watts drove a liner to Hofman. The score:

DR. NITOBÉ IS IMPRESSED WITH UNIVERSITY'S SIZE

made to come into closer relations with Japan, but all in vain.

Perry Sent to Japan

In 1849 memorials were sent to the Secretary of State by leading New York merchants requesting the sending of an ambassador to Japan. In 1853, Commodore Perry was sent to Japan as the envoy of the United States government. Many people at the time thought that the expedition was sent to conquer Japan. There was an absence of public sympathy with the enterprise, which should have created admiration and support. Perry's mission was conceived in peace and ended in peace.

A treaty was then negotiated between the two countries. The Civil War in America, which started several years after this treaty was consummated, interrupted it. Merchants complained that the treaty did not bring any commercial advantage to the country, but this treaty of Perry's was not intended to be commercial, but to establish a coaling station for the United States, and the protection of American whalers.

Japan Pays Indemnity

In 1864 a feudal baron in Southern Japan without provocation fired upon an American steamer, and later upon a French and a Dutch war vessel. Japan because of this was forced to pay an indemnity of $3,000,000, of which $800,000 went to the United States. Later, the amount was returned to Japan, and was spent by the latter in building a breakwater in the harbor of Yokohama. This cemented a cordial feeling between the two countries. In 1870 General U. S. Grant visited Japan and was received very cordially.

"On the whole," said Dr. Nitobe, "some of the best ambassadors Japan has had from different countries have come from the United States, as, except on a few occasions, America has sent over some of its best men. Consul Harris, one of the best liked of Americans in Japan, first showed the latter country how to impose a protective tariff and customs regulations. America was the first nation to recognize the supremacy of Japan in Korea. Other nations hesitated in recognizing her claims."

Owes Much to United States

Japan owes a good deal to the United States for the instruments and machinery of modern civilization. The educational system of Japan was first modelled after the American system. The Japanese postoffice system received its first impetus from that of America. In addition, America sent a much larger number of teachers to the Orient than did other countries. "There is something in the American temperament that is very akin to the Japanese temperament," said the speaker, "something they can appreciate. However different the manners and customs of the two countries, the Japanese have a traditional friendship for America which is not merely a legal or diplomatic friendship, but a psychological relation. The climax of this friendship was the treaty between the Russians and Japanese negotiated by Mr. Roosevelt."

In conclusion, Dr. Nitobe discussed briefly the accusations which have been made against Japan, and the 'war scares.' He said that there was no foundation for the idea that Japan was trying to get possession of the Phillipine Islands, or that there was any trouble over American interests in Manchuria. "There is not one possible cause," he said, "for the rupture of the old and traditional friendship of Japan and America."
